conversational approach that parallels the process by which human children acquire language. In an experimental study, O'Sullivan and Yeager (1989) contrasted the two techniques, using Terrace's Nim as their subject. They found that Nim's use of language was significantly more spontaneous under conversational conditions.

How Creatively Have Apes Used Language?

There is considerable evidence that apes have invented creative names. One of the earliest and most controversial examples involved the Gardners' chimpanzee Washoe. Washoe, who knew signs for "water" and "bird," once signed "water bird" when in the presence of a swan. Terrace et al. (1979) suggested that there was "no basis for concluding that Washoe was characterizing the swan as a 'bird that inhabits water.'" Washoe may simply have been "identifying correctly a body of water and a bird, in that order" (p. 895).

Other examples are not so easily explained away. The bonobo Kanzi has requested particular films by combining symbols in a creative way. For instance, to ask for Quest for Fire, a film about early primates discovering fire, Kanzi began to use symbols for "campfire" and "TV" (Eckholm, 1985). And the gorilla Koko has a long list of creative names to her credit: "elephant baby" to describe a Pinocchio doll, "finger bracelet" to describe a ring, "bottle match" to describe a cigarette lighter, and so on (Patterson & Linden, 1981, p. 146). If Terrace's analysis of the "water bird" example is applied to the examples just mentioned, it does not hold. Surely Koko did not first see an elephant and then a baby before signing "elephant baby" or a bottle and a match before signing "bottle match."

The word "and" links the names of two authors in the signal phrase.

When this article was first cited, all four authors were named. In subsequent citations of a work with three to five authors, "et al." is used after the first author's name.

The writer interprets the evidence; she doesn't just report it.

Footnotes

- Because APA style uses parenthetical citations, you do not need to use footnotes or endnotes to cite your sources
 - The only reasons you need to use footnotes are for explanatory (content) notes or copyright permission
- Content footnotes contain information that supplements the text, but would be distracting or inappropriate to include in the body of the paper
 - In other words, content footnotes provide important information that is a tangent to what you are discussing in your paper

My Favorite Hobby

There are many types of sport activities to be practiced by people depending on their preferences. Football is my favorite hobby and I like to practice it from my childhood for many reasons. These reasons are related to mental, physical, social and some other reasons.

Firstly, football is one of the hardest and tricky practices for the brain as well as for spiritual exercises. It is not just a game but it is also a way to increase our thinking and strategies. It can increase our problem-solving skills because when we play football we have to use our brain a lot and by playing football we also need confidence and patience. If we have these two important features, we will surely master it.

Secondly, by playing football, we can reduce our belly fat. It can make us thin, and have strong muscles and slim body. The practices and activities that are required in playing this game are good for all the body because it keeps the body healthy and balanced.

Thirdly, football has also social advantages to us. It is the type of sport that we can enjoy with our family and friends. It helps us build a good relationship with our friends and relatives. Football is also one of the favorite sports in the world because it helps us be disciplined by being punctual to come for the training session and in dealing with our teammates.

Finally, football is also good for refreshment especially in our free time in the weekends. It brings happiness and excitement to us. We can enjoy practicing this sport in different occasions. We can enjoy practicing it with our relatives and friends.

To conclude, football is a good sport practice for all people. People who are mentally, physically and socially healthy like practicing football frequently due to its good contribution in our everyday life.

Congress.gov offers a citation tool that provides support for several citation formats. The supported citation formats include the Bluebook, the American Psychological Association (APA), the Modern Language Association (MLA), and the Chicago Manual of Style (CMOS). The citation tool can generate a specific citation for bills and resolutions in any of these formats. For all other collections in Congress.gov, the citation tool will only generate a generic citation that follows the selected format's method for citing a website. The citation tool is present on the top toolbar of each Congress.gov collection page, such as Legislation, the Congressional Record, Committees, and Members. Clicking on the citation tool will open a popup. You may click Copy to Clipboard for each of the four available citation formats. Once copied, the citation will be saved to your clipboard and can be pasted elsewhere on your desktop by using Control + V or right clicking and selecting Paste. In-text: "Remarks on a Parental Leave," 1999, p. 2165) This collection provides the public with access to research products produced by the Congressional Research Service (CRS) for the United States Congress. By law, CRS works exclusively for Congress, providing timely, objective, and authoritative research and analysis to committees and Members of both the House and Senate, regardless of political party affiliation. As a legislative branch agency within the Library of Congress, CRS has been a valued and respected resource on Capitol Hill for more than a century. The products in this collection were created for the sole purpose of supporting Congress in its legislative, oversight, and representational duties. New products are regularly produced to anticipate and respond to issues of interest to Congress on a timely basis. As these issues develop, so do our products, which may be updated to reflect new information, developments, and emergent needs of Congress. The products are not designed to provide comprehensive coverage of the academic literature or address issues that are outside the scope of congressional deliberations. They are marked as "new," "updated," or "archived" to indicate their status. What is the Congressional Research Service (CRS)? The Congressional Research Service (CRS), a federal legislative branch agency located within the Library of Congress, serves as shared staff exclusively to congressional committees and Members of Congress. CRS experts assist at every stage of the legislative process — from the early considerations that precede bill drafting, through committee hearings and floor debate, to the oversight of enacted laws and various agency activities. CRS approaches complex topics from a variety of perspectives and examines all sides of an issue. Staff members analyze current policies and present the impact of proposed policy alternatives. CRS services come in many forms: reports on major policy issues tailored confidential memoranda, briefings and consultations seminars and workshops expert congressional testimony With public policy issues growing more complex, the need for insightful and comprehensive analysis has become vital. Congress relies on CRS to marshal interdisciplinary resources, encourage critical thinking and create innovative frameworks to help legislators form sound policies, reach decisions on a host of difficult issues and address their constituents' concerns and needs. These decisions will guide and shape the nation today and for generations to come. What are CRS reports? CRS reports provide Congress with both anticipatory and on-demand research and analysis to support their legislative, oversight, and representational duties. All reports adhere to the core values of CRS; they are authoritative, objective and nonpartisan. Reports range in length from several pages to more than one-hundred pages and cover the full breadth of topics of interest to Congress. What is the Appropriations Status Table? The Appropriations Status Table provides timely information on legislative activity related to the appropriations and budget process. It includes updates on the status of each of the regular appropriations bills, continuing resolutions, supplemental appropriations bills (e.g., disaster assistance supplemental appropriations legislation), omnibus appropriations measures and budget resolutions. It also provides links to related resources for appropriations legislation, such as legislative text, committee prints, and press releases. What do "new," "updated," and "archived" mean? Products marked as "New" indicate that the document is being published for the first time. When any content within a report is revised or updated, then the report status changes to "Updated", and its new "Version" number is noted. "Archived" products contain material that was current as of their date of publication but have not been subsequently updated. As such, their content may be dated. Similar, but more current, material may be found in new or updated CRS products. May I republish or use content from a report? CRS reports, as works of the United States Government, are not subject to copyright protection in the United States. Any CRS report may be reproduced and distributed in its entirety without permission from CRS. However, as a CRS report may include copyrighted images or material from a third party, you may need to obtain the permission of the copyright holder if you wish to copy or otherwise use copyrighted material. How can I contact the author of a report? By law, CRS staff are only available to assist Members, committees and staff of Congress and respond to their congressional requests. Inquiries from the media should be directed to How can I learn more about job opportunities at CRS? A listing of current vacancies at, and additional information about, CRS can be found at
